The Leibel Mills alone, with accumulators, would run the private supply (2500 glow lamps). The mains all go to the chief switch-board in the waterworks, so that one man can regulate them; besides this, a man is required for the machines in the waterworks or the pumping station, and later on, when complete, another for the Leibel Mills. The dynamos I. and II. (Plate XVIII. , Fig. 8) are in series, and connected to the mains through the switches (Uj.) and (U2.); if required, the machines III. and IV. , driven by the gas engines, can be substituted. These last two machines supply the theatre. Hb H, Fig. 8, are the supply mains. In the Town Hall there is a small battery of 60 accumulators, charged from the dynamo (1). When extended, there will be another dynamo (v) and accumulators (Li. and Lii.). On the switch-board there are 20 switches for the town supply; each dynamo is provided with a voltmeter. The cost of the undertaking, as it is at present, with four dynamos and 24 large arc lamps, including wiring and the accumulators in the Town Hall, fittings and erection, has been 1200; buildings and machines for the motive power were ready at hand previously, it being only necessary to make some slight alterations at a cost of 300. Only one extra workman was required for looking after the 80 glow lamps and 24 arcs, the...
