Excerpt: .come to this, Mary, I ll not inflict a wound. Though wealth thy charms may win, Mary, It cannot banish pain; The peace that reigned within, Mary, You may not know again. Your hand you may bestow, Mary, And strong emotions curb, But cannot soothe the woe, Mary, When nestling pangs disturb. You now are sad in speech, Mary, And cares thy smiles displace; While tears begin to bleach, Mary, The roses on your face. Oh! bitterly you find, Mary, Though friends approve your part, That love alone can bind, Mary, Affection s changeless heart. Such thoughts you may not breathe, Mary, Yet sighs a language speak; A current rolls beneath, Mary, Which your young heart may break. Through foreign climes I ll range, Mary, And may not see you more; I ll pleasures seek in change, Mary, On some far distant shore. Farewell! Adieu...

Reviews

This publication is amazing. It is definitely basic but shocks in the fifty percent of your publication. You wont feel monotony at anytime of your own time (that's what catalogues are for concerning if you question me).
