N His gold he gave with open hand, His time the poorest could command, And wise as brave, and good as grand, Sublime he stood Above the captains of the brand, The lords of blood. Mong noted northern chiefs of mind I never knew, nor can I find, A tongue or pen so much inclined, Whate er befall us, To labour bravely for mankind, As Doctor Wallace. My locks were dark as wing of night, Now at the half-way house to white, When first I heard him scorch and blight The drink unclean; And then, and now, his sword to smite Was swift and keen. He neither law nor logic spurns, But seeks the more inspiring urns, And tenderly and frank by turns, With fervent zeal, Makes Hebrew seer...
